Author of the History.

Author's Foreword

IN THE year 1900 the subject of trying to get a record of all the descendants of John Patton, Sr., was agitated and a committee was appointed to prepare the record. This committee consisted of W. W. Patton, S. T. Johnson and J. W. Patton. Quite a good deal of material was gathered but in some way it was mislaid or lost. Later on many of the relatives asked me to complete the record and have it published, and we here present the result. It is not full or perfect, but we have given all the facts available.

Some of the families have members, which are not given, but we have not been able, after many inquiries and numerous letters to obtain more information than is here given. We regret very much that we could not have given each descendant of John Patton his rightful place in this record.

As a matter of explanation, we wish to state, that where members of the family have intermarried we have followed the line of the husband. It was necessary to follow the line of one, and not of both, to avoid counting some children twice. We may have made some mistakes along this line but we have endeavored to follow the rule.

In this writing we have not attempted to trace the families of the other brothers or nephews, (we are not sure which they were) of John Patton, who came to Tennessee, at or near the same time. One of these, David Patton, settled at Bradyville in Rutherford County. The other whose name we think was Robert, settled on the north side of the Cumberland river, near Springfield. We have made a number of inquiries in an effort to find who were John Patton's parents and his connection with other branches of the Patton family, but we have nothing thus far that we can give as reliable.

An effort has been made to obtain pictures of all the members of the second and third generations, but we have been able to obtain only those here presented.

It would have been gratifying to us if we could have had a picture of each member of John Patton's descendants, but that would have added much to the delay in getting out the work and very largely to the cost. If in the future such a work should be desired it could be gotten out.

We append some blank leaves to this book for recording the births, marriages and deaths in each family as they occur in the future and also to correct any mistakes which may have been made in this history, so that it may serve as a complete record for each family. Then if at any future time it should be desired to make another edition of the history the data would be easy to obtain.

In the hope that this record will enable us to become better acquainted with each other and to know just how we are related we send it forth on its mission, praying that it may be a stimulus to us all to preserve untarnished the names of our godly ancestors.

John Patton and Descendents

THE SUBJECT of this sketch, John Patton, was born Nov. 17, 1767. No record of his place of birth has been left. He was probably born in North Carolina, but he may have been born in Ireland. The family was of the Scotch-Irish, blue stocking, Presbyterian stock, but we do not have the date of their coming to America. We know that they were here during the Revolutionary War. We do not know the name of his father nor the name and family of his mother. He was born in the stirring times which preceded the Revolution and seems to have imbibed in early life the principles which actuated the American patriots. At the age of twelve years when the British and Tories were overrunning Virginia and the Carolinas, after the defeat of General Gates at Camden, two Tories came to their home, a log cabin, with a small shed room on one side in which they kept their meal, and a loft made of boards laid on poles used as joists, and as usual, made a general search to see if there was anything they desired. One of them set his gun down and climbed into the loft to see what he could find, while the other went into the meal room to prowl among the things there. John wanted to take the gun of the one in the loft and shoot the one in the meal room and then get his gun and shoot the one in the loft when he should come down, but his mother would not let him undertake it lest he should fail and they should be killed by the angered Tories. He still thought, even after he had passed middle life that he could have killed them both.

It would be interesting to know more of his boyhood and early life, of his school life, for he could read, of his courtship and of the early social customs of those good old times, but all that has come down to us is the simple statement left in the old family Bible, "John Patton and Mary Thompson were married on the 24th day of November, 1791." She was the daughter of James Thompson, who was also of Scotch-Irish descent, who seems to have been a man of deep piety and of solid worth. James Thompson had other children. One daughter, Rachel, married Henry Payne, whose children were James, John, Joseph, Andrew, Mary (Armstrong), Elizabeth (Patterson), Abigail (Branch and Thompson). Another daughter of James Thompson Abigail married Farmer Thompson, though not a relative, and they had no children. One son, Henry, whose children were James, Henry, Eli, William and Andrew. One son, Andrew, whose children were James, John, Dennis, Joseph, George and Synthia. One son, James, whose children were Calvin, John, Andrew and Margaret, and by a second marriage, Robert, Houston and others.

The old family Bible gives the following register of the children: "To John Patton and Mary (Thompson) Patton children were born in the following order:

Joseph Patton, born Sept. 17, 1792.

James Thompson Patton, born April 16, 1794.

John Patton, born August 13, 1796.

Andrew Patton, born October 7, 1800.

Two infants between Andrew and Jonathan whose names are not recorded.

Jonathan Patton, born October 23, 1803.

Thomas Patton, born April 18, 1806.

Samuel Patton, born Sept. 21, 1808.

These constituted the family, except Samuel, who was the only son born in Tennessee. With this growing family the question of support would naturally force itself upon the parents. Just at this time a number of emigrants had been going out of the Old North State of pine forests and poor land and some of them had returned with glowing accounts of the fertility and cheapness of the lands along the Duck River Valley in Maury County, Tenn. Immediately a number of them decided to "go west" and among them John Patton and two of his nephews, David Patton, who settled near Bradyville, in Rutherford County, and another whose name, we think, was Robert Patton, who settled north of the Cumberland River, and whose descendants now live near Springfield, in Robertson County, and further west, and James Thompson, John Patton's father-in-law, with most of his children and grand-children and a number of other friends and neighbors all started for Duck River in Maury County, to the neighborhood of Zion church. Tradition says that they drove up the Smith Fork Valley on the 21st day of May, 1808, and camped at the old Armstrong Spring, now Statesville, the village then being up the creek near where Rev. John F. Patton died.

Having heard that so many settlers had moved into the locality to which they had started that it was difficult to obtain food supplies and seed corn they decided to stop and make a crop and then go on. John Patton and Henry Payne, his brother-in-law, drove up the branch to the right of Statesville and stopped at the farm afterwards owned by Andrew Payne and on which he died, and both families lived in a cabin and cultivated a small field which they enlarged some, and also rented the "Spring field" which now belongs to Richard Patton, in which was the big spring, from Samuel Patterson, who lived at the Nelson G. Alexander place. Here they worked and lived in the most economical way, grazing their horses on the cane and wild pea vines for feed. One day when they had turned their horses out to browse on the cane the horses had strayed a little way out, and while hunting the horses they found the large spring just west of the Charley Patton place. It seems almost unbelievable that a spring like that could ever have been concealed. From this we get some idea of the height and density of the cane which then grew all over the country.

After staying one year they decided to make a second crop before going on to their final destination. During the second year, however, some of them were so well pleased with the country that they bought and entered land, and then others, and finally the entire party decided to go no further, except James Thompson, son of James Thompson, Sr. He moved on to Maury County and remained for some time, but finally came back to Wilson County and was after that called "Murray Jim."

S. T. Johnson, grandson of Samuel Patton, said he heard his grandfather say that the reason they took up the hilly land instead of the level lands about Watertown, which were then vacant, was because they were afraid the level bottoms would be unhealthy. The streams were quite crooked and at times overflowed much of the bottom land and was all densely covered with cane and under-brush and was wet and swampy much of the time.

They were Presbyterians of the blue-stocking, Scotch-Irish stock and were proverbial for their loyalty to their religious convictions. They were strict in their observance of the Sabbath. When on their journey from North Carolina to Tennessee they struck camp on Saturday night and rested over the Sabbath. Other parties making the same journey would drive on, but the Sabbath rest so much invigorated their teams that they would overtake those who did not observe the Sabbath. They would visit the sick on the Sabbath and do necessary work, but they did not visit for pleasure nor do anything which could be done on Saturday before, as cutting wood, etc. Children had to be quiet and were not allowed to engage in games on the Sabbath. Those who could read were required to memorize and recite the shorter catechism. This and other reading was the principal occupation of the children on Sunday afternoons. At all other times children were given much liberty and enjoyed themselves greatly. They were taught to be truthful and honest and to obey their parents. These people were practically all members of Mt. Vernon Church. Later on Andrew Patton and his family united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Of the later generations some have joined other denominations. None of John Patton's children were preachers, but of his descendants have come six Presbyterian, one Cumberland Presbyterian, one Methodist and two Baptist Ministers. Three of his children were ruling elders, and quite a number of his descendants have been church officials. To the family belong a large number of teachers and twenty have taken collegiate degrees in reputable colleges and universities.

John Patton entered the farm afterwards owned by his son, Samuel, and lived there until they became so enfeebled by age that they could no longer do the necessary work of keeping house. Then his children built him a house in his son, Joseph Patton's yard, where he lived until his death. When the grandchildren would come to bring them food he would place his hands upon their heads and invoke God's blessings upon them. How they appreciated these prayers in after life. He was a man of prayer and had unquestioning faith in God's promises, and when the end came he looked up and said, "See there are the angels come for me." And the angels bore him home. He died November 17, 1845, aged 78 years and was buried at Mt. Vernon.

Mary Thompson, his wife, was an exemplary woman. She was a true companion and a loyal helpmeet to him through all of their fifty-four years of married life. For about seven years she was afflicted with a nervous disease called "hysteria." During this period she was in bed most of the time and thought she would die. The doctor finally advised that she be induced in some way to engage in some kind of work which would divert her mind from her ailment. One of the neighbors gave out that he wanted a new bed cord which Mary Patton had spun. When she heard this she got up and began to spin on her flax spinning wheel. She was an expert at spinning. She spun for only a short time at first, but she gradually lengthened the spinning periods until when the cord was finished she found herself so much improved that she left her bed entirely. It was very amusing to the grandchildren to see grandfather milking the cows while grandmother minded the calves, and to see him weave while she filled the quills. Both of these were the reverse of what was customary among other families. But he was a faster milker than she, and he was a weaver by trade and never quite gave it up as long as he was able to work. She was reared in a religious home and surrounded by religious influences and she was in full accord with her husband in all his efforts to make the home a Christian home. When he died she continued to live with her son, Joseph, until her death. She died October 14, 1846, aged 77 years and was laid to rest beside her husband to await the coming of our Lord.

Such in brief is their history and such characters are the legacy which we, their descendants, have inherited. Let us strive to prove ourselves worthy of such an inheritance.

John Patton and Mary, his wife, were just plain, common people, never aspiring to anything very high, either financially or in a literary way. He was a plain, simple farmer and lived before the days of modern farm machinery. He was never a wealthy man, but by economic living had plenty. He was emphatically a man of one book, and his Bible had its place on the "stand table." He looked to it for guidance. It is related that when the great shakes which made Reelfoot Lake occurred, and when many people were greatly alarmed, they came to his house and waked him up to see if he thought the end of time had come. He replied, "We will see." He went out and felt the shaking and looked about at the sky and then went back into the house, lighted a candle and turned to his old Book and read the description of the phenomena which would accompany that event, and then announced that it was not the end of time, but simply an earthquake. His neighbors had so much confidence in his knowledge of what the Bible said that they went back to their homes and went to bed and he did the same. It would be interesting to know what Scripture he read.

In the family are many good singers and a number of instrumental performers.

Among the descendants are many common school and high school teachers and some college professors.

One characteristic of the men of the family is the desire and ability to operate machinery of various kinds.

The women of the family were industrious, frugal and cheerful, and were much concerned about the moral and religious training of their children.

The older generation, in connection with other good people of the community, established the custom of helping any one of the neighbors who became sick or otherwise disabled with their work without charge, whether it was to plant or cultivate, or harvest a crop, or get wood for the winter, or rebuild a burned house. This custom still prevails in the old neighborhood and has brought gladness to many homes.

They revere the name, the worship and the Book of God, and very few of the descendants of John Patton habitually take the name of God in vain.

His children settled near him and all except John, the third son, died near the old home. Now his descendants are widely scattered. Some still live near the old home. Others are scattered from New York to Texas, and from California to Georgia, but in our hearts we dwell close together.

Other people have had ancestors who had a higher place in history than ours, but we are content that ours were honest, upright, truthful, Christian people, and we believe that to have so instilled these principles into their children that with very few exceptions these have become family characteristics, is more worthy of just pride than to have had their names emblazoned on the scroll of fame.

May our father's God be our God. May the Lord watch over and guide us until we shall meet on the other side.

The children of John Patton having been reared at a time when there were few shops and a limited amount of money early in life acquired the habits of self-dependence in most matters. The lands were fertile and yielded abundant crops. The farm machinery was very crude. The old wooden mold-board turning plow and the bull tongue were the plows in use. At first the sickle or reap hook was used for cutting grain and it took an expert to cut an acre per day. The first departure from the old reap hook custom in the community was when Joseph Patton, the oldest son, procured a cradle scythe, stocked it and used it and was accounted a hero among the old reap hook cutters. These scythes and cradles gradually came into general use and were employed until they were superceded by the modern harvesting machines. All of these old men could and did make their own cradles for saving grain. They tramped the wheat out with horses until threshing machinery came into use. The wheat was ground on horse mills and bolted by hand until water and steam mills were introduced. Our modern white flour was unknown to them.

Many of the men could do shop work in either wood or iron, such as building wagons, making and stocking plows, shoeing horses, etc.

Their stock that was not used for work ran out on the commons much of the time. Hogs could live most of the winter on mast. Their sheep were fed only a short time in the worst part of the winter, and the rest of the time were out on the commons. Their women spun the wool, colored it and wove it into cloth and made the clothing for the family. Some of the men killed their own beeves, tanned their hides and made them into shoes for the family, and the women molded the tallow into candles for lights and lived in general on what they made, occasionally buying shoes or hats or dresses at the stores. They were social and visited much. They helped each other much in log rollings and house raisings and quiltings and were always willing to lend a helping hand to anyone in need. At these gatherings they had many jokes and much merriment and had real good times together.

Joseph Patton, the oldest son, bought a farm near Mt. Vernon known as the Arch Pugh place, but soon after sold it and bought the farm where W. W. Patton now lives, which included all the land south of the N. G. Alexander farm and to and beyond the top of the hill on the west side, and part of the hill on the east side and south to the top of the hill south of the Charley Patton place, and now known as Patton Hollow. Here he spent the rest of his life. He took quite a good deal of interest in public affairs, and owned and read a number of theological books. He owned slaves and believed slavery was right, but he was good to his slaves. He had family prayers each night and morning and always had the negroes to come in for the Scripture reading and prayer. He married Anna Patterson daughter of Samuel Patterson and Julia (Wallace) Patterson, on Oct. 17, 1817. Anna Patterson was a half sister to Alex Patterson, who married a Miss Bedford and their daughter married a Mr. Forest, and they were the parents of Gen. Nathan Bedford Forest, of Civil War fame, so that Gen. Forest was the great grandson of Samuel Patterson.

To them were born six children. Anna Patton died May 10, 1835. Joseph Patton married Margaret Compton Aug. 14, 1836, and to this union were born seven children.

Joseph Patton died Nov. 26, 1859.

James Thompson Patton, second son of John and Mary, was born April 16, 1794. He died when about nineteen years old and was never married.

John Patton, the third son, of John and Mary, married Elizabeth Shores, but we have no record of the date of their marriage. They had five children, Jonathan, Joseph, Phillip, Mary, and a son whose name is forgotten. The family moved to Illinois about 1845 and settled near "Sugar Camp," in Jefferson County. The family was poisoned with "Milk-sick," and some of them died. Joseph and Phillip, or Phil, as he was called, lived in the neighborhood until about 1870, but none of the relatives know anything of their whereabouts now. Mary, the daughter, married a St. Louis hotel keeper, but so far as is known she left no children.

John Patton was buried at Sugar Camp graveyard in Jefferson County, Ill.

Andrew Patton, fourth son of John and Mary, born Oct. 7, 1800, owned a farm and lived on it southeast of Statesville, near Bone's Camp Ground. He was a man who always looked on the bright side of things and did much to recommend the Christian religion by his cheerful Christian life. It was said by many people "I want the kind of religion Andy Patton has." Religious seekers were always glad to have him talk to them, because they had unbounded confidence in his Christian character. He was an elder in the Statesville Cumberland Presbyterian church. He married Elizabeth Forbes Dec. 23, 1819. They had nine children.

Of the next two children of John and Mary nothing is recorded except that they died in infancy. Not even their names are recorded.

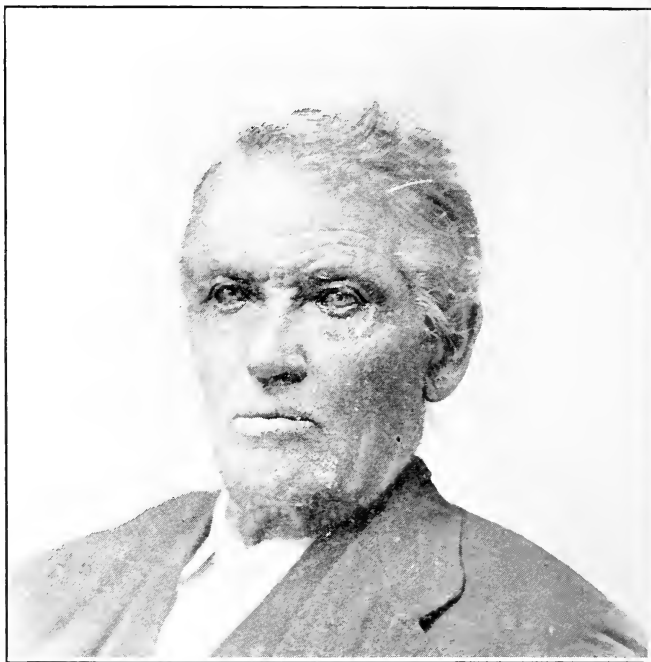

Jonathan, the seventh son of John and Mary, was born Oct. 22, 1803. It was said of him that he was quite slender and not at all strong in his early youth, and that when he was 16 years old he weighed only 90 pounds, but that in about three years he weighed 180. He served the Mt. Vernon church as a ruling elder for many years. He married Ruth Godfrey May 5, 1825. To them were born three children. He lived and died on his farm near Mt. Olivet. He died May 5, 1883.

Thomas, the eighth son, was born April 18, 1806. He seemed to be more inclined to drift away from the old home than some of the others. He moved to Illinois but afterwards became dissatisfied and moved back to Tennessee. Later in life he moved to DeKalb County near Smithville, and lived there for a number of years, but he finally settled down near Statesville and died there. He married first Rebecca Patterson, sister of Anna, Joseph's wife. They had six children. Rebecca died April 30, 1841. Thomas married Mary Jane Bland Aug. 13, 1841. To them were born six children. Mary Jane died Oct. 27, 1850. Thomas married Eliza McNamara Jan. 28, 1851. They had no children. Thomas Patton died Dec. 6, 1871.

Samuel, the ninth son, was born Sept. 21, 1808. He was the only one of the children born in Tennessee. When he was to be married his father proposed to—him that he would give him a young mare instead of an infare dinner which he had given to each of his other sons, because of the illness of his wife, Mary, at the time. He accepted the proposition and this seemed to turn his attention to making money, and he became the money-maker of the family. He bought farms for most of his children. He lived and died on the old farm which his father, John Patton, entered. He married Eleanor Compton; we have not the date of his death.

These are the men of the second generation. They are all dead. To Joseph Patton, the oldest, and Anna Patterson his first wife, were born the following children, James Thompson, Jane, John, Julia Ann, Mary, Samuel Donald. To Joseph and Margaret Compton, his second wife, were born Joseph, Edward, Jonathan, Richard H., Anna, Rebecca and Eleanor. Of these we give each by families.

James T. Patton, oldest son of Joseph and Anna Patton.
